Nomination Process

Here is a summary of the nominations process that results in the slate of candidates being announced each year:

- A call for recommendations for candidates is made to the Cornell alumni community and Alumni affairs staff; candidates are identified.
- After the committee’s initial review of candidates, those selected for consideration are verified by the nominations committee for their eligibility and willingness to serve.
- The nominations committee chair provides the candidate’s information to each nominations committee member.
- Each representative separately evaluates the information, rating each candidate for each position according to criteria determined by the committee. Results are recorded on a ballot, which is turned in to the nominations committee chair.
- The nominations committee chair compiles the results of each ballot and distributes the results to the committee.
- The committee meets via teleconference to create a draft of the slate.
- The committee meets via teleconference again and determines the final slate by consensus.
- The nominations committee chair notifies all candidates, both those selected for the slate, and those who are not. Feedback from the committee is provided.
- The final slate is announced to the board of directors at the Spring Association Board meeting.

Questions about eligibility, duties of office, or the process the nominations committee follows can be directed to the nominations committee chair.
